Victor, NY - Han-Tek, Inc., announces that they have successfully passed their recent ISO9001 audit through their registrar, Eagle Auditors, to the new revised standard ISO9001:2008. The new standard was released on November 15, 2008. Han-Tek has been registered to the ISO Quality Management System standard since 2003. The upgrade was achieved 2 weeks after the new standard was released. "According to our auditor, he believes we were the first firm his company upgraded to the new standard," states Jon Tobin, company president.

Han-Tek specializes in automated systems integration and product flow through industrial, manufacturing or distribution environment. The integrated design and equipment solutions that Han-Tek provides moves products faster and more effectively through production lines, or from the line to packaging and shipping. These systems replace high-risk or repetitive motion activities with safe and reliable automated solutions. This process can substantially reduce product damage or spillage.

'While our products range from an automated overhead crane to fully integrated robotic system our operations procedure is essentially the same every time because of our ISO processes. This has been a driving force behind our production excellence.' remarks Business Development Manager Patrick Tobin.
